

Riverside Life Skills School is a 12-month school serving students in grades 6 through 12. The School is designed to accommodate adolescents with significant mental health issues and learning challenges through a highly structured academic environment, involving therapeutic groups and activities supported by a team of special educators and licensed clinicians.

Scott M. Bock, Riverside's President/CEO is particularly excited about the School's unique characteristics. "The emphasis at Life Skills School is on meeting individual needs of each student so that they can be prepared emotionally, socially and academically to go back to their public school as soon as they are ready. The fact that the length of study at the School is determined by the progress achieved by each student, rather than by the length of the school year or semester can make the School a cost-effective option for school districts," explains Bock.
